

SCAVENGER HUNT AT BAMZ

Whose foot is this?

---

Why do you think he has webbed feet?

---

Fun fact: These animals have 5 toes on their front feet but only 4 toes on their back feet.

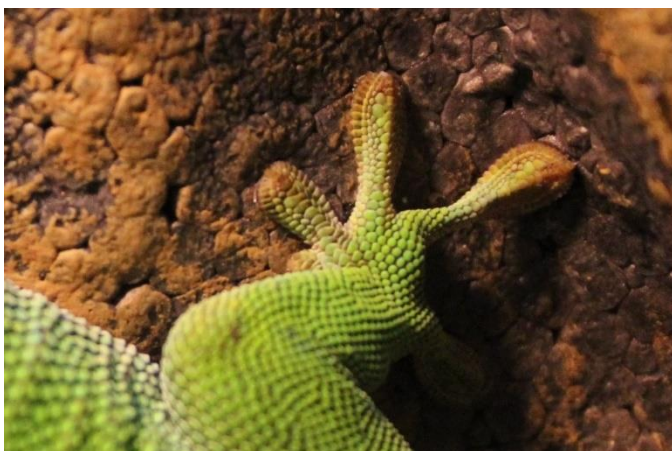

Whose feet are these?

---

Do you think that the joint halfway down their leg is their knee or their ankle? Hint: See the sign and notice how the legs bend.

---

Whose foot is this? It's the species that's featured in the GEICO commercials!

---

Fun fact: This species has plate-like scales on the bottom of its toes that help it grip tightly to different surfaces, even glass!

SCAVENGER HUNT AT BAMZ

Whose hand and foot are these?

---

Fun facts: Their hands are adept at climbing, feeding and grooming. Both the hands and feet have opposable thumbs for gripping.

Whose foot is this?

---

How can you tell males from females of this species by their front feet? Hint: See the sign in the Caribbean exhibit or reptile walkway.

---

Whose hand and foot are these?

---

Fun facts: Its fingers have claws rather than nails like humans and other primates, and it uses its long, thin fingers to reach into tight crevices to get insects.

SCAVENGER HUNT AT BAMZ

Whose feet are these?

---

Fun facts: Its hind feet only have 3 toes but its front feet have 5 toes. Its front feet are put on the ground only when the animal is moving slowly.

Whose feet are these? Hint: Look for this animal in the Museum

---

Fun fact: This animal's feet are great for helping it swim but its legs are so far back on its body that it cannot walk well on land.

Whose flipper is this?

---

Is this a front foot or a back foot? Hint: Either watch the animals or look at the exhibit's sign for the answer.

---

SCAVENGER HUNT AT BAMZ

Whose foot is this?

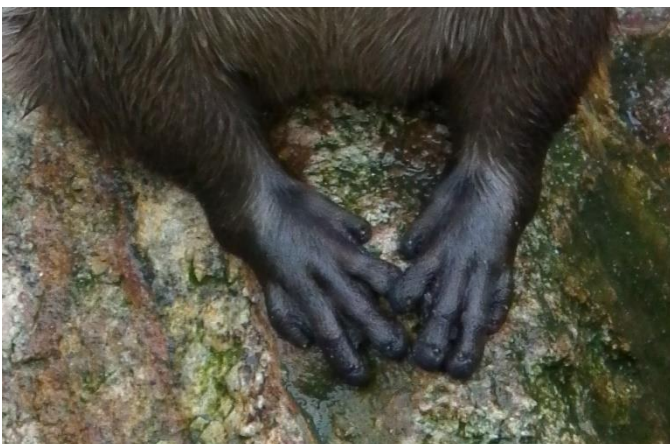

How much do these animals weight? Hint: See the sign.

Whose foot is this?

How many toes point forward and how many toes point backward?

Fun fact: Parrots are the only type of birds that can lift their foot to their beak to feed.

Whose front feet are these?

What about its feet gives this species its name? Hint: Look closely at the photo!